

Credit Practices Rule (Regulation AA)

Introduction

The Credit Practices Rule (Rule), contained in Subpart B of the Federal Reserve Board's Regulation AA, was adopted to prohibit certain unfair and deceptive practices related to consumer credit contracts. The prohibitions contained in the Rule apply to all credit contracts originated or purchased by financial institutions other than those for the purchase of real estate.

Regulation Overview

The Credit Practices Rule applies to all consumer credit contracts other than those for the purchase of real estate. It prohibits banks from using certain remedies to enforce consumer credit obligations. Under the Rule, banks may not include these remedies in their consumer credit contracts, and, if banks purchase contracts that contain a prohibited provision(s), banks are prohibited from enforcing the provision(s).

The prohibited provisions are: (1) A confession of judgment clause, (also known as a cognovit or warrant of attorney) which permits a creditor to obtain a judgment based on the borrower's agreement in advance that, in the event of a suit on the obligation, the borrower waives the right to notice and the opportunity to be heard; (2) a waiver of exemption in which the consumer relinquishes a statutory right protecting his or her home and other necessities from seizure to satisfy a judgment, unless the waiver applies solely to property that serves as security for the obligation; (3) an irrevocable assignment of future wages which gives the bank the right to receive the consumer's wages or earnings directly from the consumer's employer, unless the assignment constitutes a payroll deduction plan or other preauthorized payment plan; and (4) the taking of nonpossessory security interests in household goods, unless such goods are purchased with the credit extended by the bank.

The Rule also prohibits a practice known as "pyramiding late charges." Under the pyramiding provision, a bank is prevented from assessing multiple late charges based on a single late payment that is subsequently paid. This provision applies only to closed-end credit contracts.

Finally, the Rule prohibits a bank from misrepresenting a cosigner's liability and requires the bank to give a cosigner, prior to becoming obligated in a consumer credit transaction, a disclosure notice which explains the nature of the cosigner's obligations and liabilities under the contract.

Examination Procedures

1. Determine through discussion with financial institution management and staff if the financial institution attempts to enforce confessions of judgment, assignments of wages, security interests in household goods, or waivers of exemption in originated or acquired consumer contracts. (227.13)
2. Review the financial institution's collection policies, procedures, and practices to ensure that staff members are not using an assignment of wages except where permissible. (227.13(c))
3. Review past due loans to determine if the financial institution collects or attempts to collect overdue payments through assignments of wages. 227.13(c))
4. Review past due loans to determine if the financial institution collects, or attempts to collect, a late charge on a timely payment because of the consumer's failure to pay a late charge attributable to a prior delinquent payment. This prohibited practice is known as pyramiding of late charges. (227.15)
5. Determine, through a review of procedures, policies, and practices, whether the financial institution takes steps to prevent its staff from engaging in prohibited co-signer practices on loans. (227.14(a))
6. Determine through discussions with financial institution management and staff, if there is evidence that the financial institution engages in prohibited co-signer practices. Examples include misrepresentation of a co-signer's liability and contractually obligating co-signers prior to informing them of their liability. (227.14(a))
7. Determine through discussions with financial institution management and staff and a review of loan files, whether the co-signer is informed prior to becoming obligated, of the nature and extent of the co-signer's liability in accordance with Section 227.14(a).
